

We're a small, independent and family-run publisher producing a diverse range of beautiful and inclusive children's books.

Our stories are imaginative, exciting and fun, and provide representation to children otherwise under-represented in media.

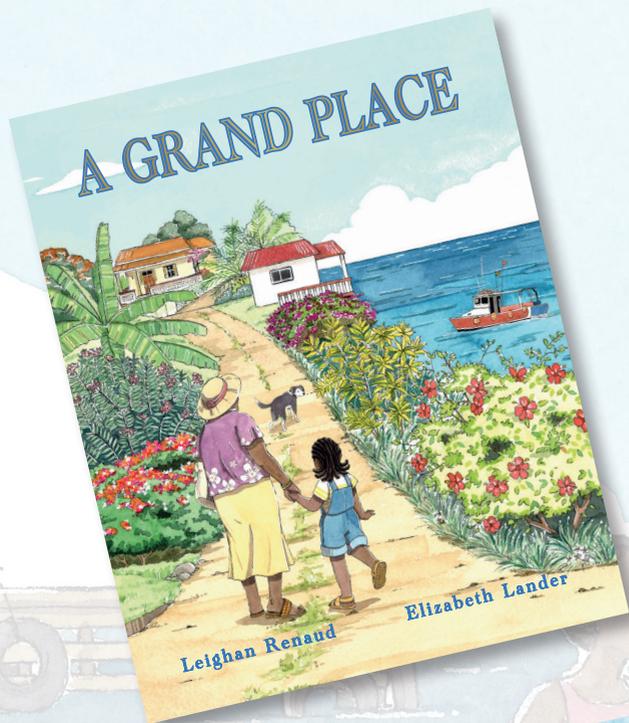

We're passionate about increasing positive, incidental Black representation across all genres in children's literature and platforming Black and marginalised creative talent in publishing by amplifying the voices of those traditionally excluded.

We are committed to being mindful of our carbon footprint, which means all of our books are printed locally in the UK.

THE LOST CITY OF TAU

You sit at the back of the tea house with a warm mug cradled in your hands, allowing the darkness of the corner to cloak you. Your search for The Lost City of Tau has proved fruitless so far. Some of the reports you've collected have its location as two leagues beneath the sea, some have it in a cavern closer to the earth's mantle than its surface, while others still place it in the sky, eleven miles above you in the clouds. Unable to clearly judge the validity of each report, you consider all locations equally likely. It is also possible Tau is a moving city.

THE LIGAROOT TREE

The Ligaroot Tree stood in the center of the island, with a large moat separating it from the mainland. Under the ground its nine colourful roots were changeable and moving, altering shape and colour in the blink of an eye like an octopus' tentacles.

The trunk of the Ligaroot Tree was fifty-one feet in girth and its bark was nine-hundred and eighteen shades of brown. The tallest point of the tree was three-hundred and fifteen feet high and its roots reached six-hundred and three feet down into the earth.

The tree bore countless fruits and while no two were the same, all were delicious. The fruits of the Ligaroot Tree took less than a month to mature. On the night of the full moon, the Ligaroot Tree would drop all its fruit and instantly begin growing more again.
