FEATURES

Australian Geographic in partnership with Corey Tutt (NSW, young Australian of the year) and Deadly Science are proud to present a Deadly Science book series.

Publishing in August 2021, January 2022 and June 2022 these eight books will cover engaging science topics that inspire primary-aged readers to ask questions experiment and learn about how scientific principles impact the way we live. Focusing on topics such as Animal Adaption, Life Cycles and Renewable Energy, these books will teach scientific principles with a focus on Indigenous knowledge and wisdom.

The books will also examine how those scientific principles are at play in our daily lives from inner city school gardens to rural communities.

EXTRAORDINARY & ENDANGERED

Careless human interaction with the natural world has pushed many of Australia's most extraordinary native animals to the brink of extinction.

This book offers an empowering opportunity for people to engage with the creatures that need us most and participate in the repopulation of these threatened animals.

Extraordinary & Endangered

STOPPING THE EXTINCTION,
ONE SPECIES AT A TIME

Giant Burrowing Frog

Heteropneustes australis

As heavy rainfall soaks the sandy soils of south-west Australia, health and woodland, a strange series of bubbling noises sounds through the night air. These quickly followed by a series of rapid-fire, one-like 'vo-coo-oo' sounds, forming many to ponder what sort of animal makes such a noise. It's not a bat though, but rather the giant burrowing frog - one of the largest in Australia. Its huge, rounded form is adorned with white or yellow-orange along the flanks and a yellowish-goldish ridge runs the entire of its mouth, beneath a pair of large bulging eyes. The males possess large inflated gapes on their first three fingers used to dig the female during mating and to fight rival males.

If you like to see a giant burrowing frog, you had better prepare for one, unless you're a good swimmer. It may be found in the shallow, brown water of the banks of small creeks.

Brush-Tailed Rock-Wallaby

Petrogale penicillata

In Victoria, the brush-tailed rock-wallaby now remains only two small and isolated populations. These are a holdover 'relict' species in today's world. This agile species lives on rugged terrain and can bound great distances up and down rocky terrain. They hide among the crevices during the day and emerge at dusk to feed on native grasses and other vegetation.

The brush-tailed rock-wallaby inhabits the region from south-western Queensland to eastern New South Wales and Victoria. They are recognised entirely genetically distinct populations. The populations known, with southern forms in the east located in Victoria, Queensland and the impact of fires, foxes and goats has reduced the few remaining populations to become isolated. This species has received a lack of government diversity within the population, too - another significant threat to the survival of the species.

Hastings River Mouse

Pseudomys orala

The Hastings River mouse is a small rodent with a head and body length of about 17cm. It has brownish-grey fur above, but its greyish-white fur below and white feet. The 15cm-long tail is also brownish-white on the underside. They have bulging eyes surrounded by black eye-rings and a strongly rounded nose.

Gilbert's Potoroo

Potorous gilbertii

Gilbert's potoroo is a small kangaroo-like marsupial, slightly smaller than a rabbit with a dense coat of soft grey-brown fur and a slender downwards-curving nose. It is found only in a small area of the south coast of Western Australia and is thought to be Australia's rarest mammal with only about 100 individuals known to be alive. It had not been recorded since the 1870s and was believed to be extinct when it was rediscovered on Mount Gardner at Two Peoples Bay in 1994. It is threatened by fire, predation by foxes and cats, lack of genetic diversity and climate change.

AUSTRALIA'S WEIRD & WONDERFUL ANIMALS

Kids & Adults love to look at weird creatures and even better when they are in Australia this book will blow them away with the different animals that many people rarely see.

There is so much that we don't know about Australian species!

For instance, Blue glaucus (or a Blue dragon) is a species of small, blue sea slug, a pelagic aeolid nudibranch in the family Glaucidae.

You can find them washed up on beaches on windy days, but don't touch them – they are poisonous!

Although still little, it was Mermaid's big call,
